

The Imperial Palace Vienna at a Glance

Imperial Palace Vienna

Since its creation in the 13th century, the Imperial Palace Vienna has been subject to constant modification. As a consequence, it has become a reflection of the many cultural, political, social, and economic developments throughout Austria's history.

Today, the Swiss Yard (Schweizerhof) represents the oldest part of the building complex. It dates back to the time of Emperor Frederick II of the House of Hohenstaufen. Over the centuries, the rectangular palace of the Late Medieval Period was reconstructed, adapted, expanded, and connected to its adjacent buildings until it eventually became the building complex that, today, constitutes the Imperial Palace Vienna.

Dreaming of an Imperial Forum, Emperor Franz Joseph I initiated the last large extension in the second half of the 19th century. However, his dream never fully came true. Only Maria-Theresien Square (Maria-Theresien-Platz) with its two world-famous museums, the youngest wing of the Imperial Palace Vienna – New Castle (Neue Burg) – and St. Michael's Gate (Michaelertor) with its sumptuous cupola were to be completed.

In its present form the Imperial Palace Vienna, which is situated in the heart of the city, covers an area of more than 300,000 m² and fulfils a wide array of roles.

Hofburg Info Center

The recently created Hofburg Info Center nestles between the youngest wing of the Imperial Palace Vienna – New Castle (Neue Burg) – Weltmuseum Wien and the Austrian National Library. Its aim is to provide visitors with all the information they need about the institutions located in the area as well as its history.

It serves as residence, office area, and cultural centre. It also is an urban recreation site – notably thanks to its vast green spaces that make up more than one third of the entire area. Furthermore, the Imperial Palace Vienna provides more than 4,000 jobs and is a visitor magnet, with over 25,000,000 visiting the complex every year and more than 6,000,000 annual visitors to the museums situated on the premises.

The museum collections comprise major archaeological finds, natural history collections as well as one of the richest collections of Antique documents, and unique collections of paintings, drawings and graphic art.

The area of the Imperial Palace Vienna is mostly used by cultural institutions and the federal government. The offices of the Federal President might be the most prominent example. They have been located in the former imperial apartments of Empress Maria Theresa in the palace's Leopoldine Wing (Leopoldinertrakt) since 1946.

Some offices of the Federal Chancellery are situated in Amalia's Wing (Amalienstrasse). Also, the federal office for the protection of monuments of historic significance (Bundesdenkmalamt) and (Burghauptmannschaft Österreich) which have their offices in the Swiss Yard (Schweizerhof) should be mentioned in this regard. The Palace's Visitor Centre, which is housed in the Corps de Logis on the south-western corner of Heldenplatz Square, serves as first point of contact and orientation for visitors from all over the world. It provides information on the Palace's history and upcoming events.

European Heritage Label

The Imperial Palace Vienna, imperial residence and legacy of the Habsburgs until 1918, was awarded the European Heritage Label in 2015. As a consequence, it figures among the list of Europe's most significant cultural heritage sites.

Burghauptmannschaft Österreich

The Imperial Palace Vienna is owned by the Federal Republic of Austria. It is being administered by Burghauptmannschaft Österreich, a subordinate department of the Federal Ministry for Digital and Economic Affairs.

Following a legal amendment in the year 2000, the properties inside and outside of Austria which constitute Austria's historic heritage were transferred to Burghauptmannschaft Österreich. In Vienna, this comprises the Imperial Palace Vienna, the Federal Chancellery, Belvedere Palace, Augarten Park as well as the government building at Stubenring (former imperial war ministry) and a number of other palaces. In the other provinces, this extends to the Imperial Palace Innsbruck, Ambras Castle as well as the memorial sites at the former concentration camps of Mauthausen, Gusen, and Ebensee.

The objects and properties transferred to Burghauptmannschaft Österreich are characterised by their limited scope of use, the application of international and legal provisions, or their use for political or sovereign purposes by the supreme bodies of the Republic.

The body's core activities comprise the sustainable conservation, management and organisation of cultural and tourism activities in the properties that constitute Austria's cultural heritage.

The authority has been headed by Reinhold Sahl since 2010.

Bundesdenkmalamt (Federal Monuments Authority Austria)

The primary aim of the authority is to preserve in an authentic way Austria's cultural heritage which is an irreplaceable capital for the future. The Federal Monuments Authority is also a service agency. It has a legal mandate to protect and preserve our heritage, conducts research, and is active in teaching and dissemination of knowledge.

Austrian Film Museum

If you enter the film museum you will not believe your eyes. Instead of exhibition rooms you will “just” find a cinema. That’s the idea: the exhibitions are on the screens. Simply showing films, however, does not make a museum. Therefore, the museum does not only present films to the public, but it also collects, conserves, and distributes them as well as conducts research. There is a new programme every day, and the films are presented in their original language.
